

When the Governor's lovely assistant is found dead on the floor of Montana's Capitol, Missoula Senator Audrey Welter finds herself accused of murder. She turns to a Senate colleague, attorney Stretch Bruce from Roundup, to represent her. They struggle to fulfill their legislative obligations while preparing a defense to the charge and trying to figure out who is the real killer. Was it the Governor? The Attorney General? The vagrant found lurking in the basement of Capitol? Was it Audrey's former husband, who was enamored with the dead woman and had been stalking her? The twists and turns come one after another right up to the end of the trial, as Audrey's life hangs in the balance.

The twists and turns come one after another right up to the end of the trial, as Audrey's life hangs in the balance. Jim Moore's The Body On The Floor Of The Rotunda is Montana storytelling at its best. The scenes of the legislature in session are so real they could only have been. Lying in state is the tradition in which the body of a dead official is placed in a state building, face the casket, hold their rifles with their right hand, and keep the rifle butt resting on the floor. In the process of lying in honor, the honor guard in the Rotunda is provided by the Capitol Police or another suitable source.

The United States Capitol rotunda is the central rotunda (built 1800-1808) of the United States Capitol building. The sandstone rotunda walls rise 48 feet (15 m) above the floor; everything above this is the Capitol dome. The rotunda was designed in by Thomas U.
